

The snow was falling in light flakes. It was not too much, just a veil on the streets like butter that my mother smeared on bread every morning. There was no one out, it was very cold. It was wonderful watching the white form the roof. His dad was cleaning the snow from the last chimney. So now, all the chimneys were clearly visible from above. He went with him because it was exciting to think that they were just helping him ... He will soon return home to wait for Santa Claus like all children of the world...

In winter, you could only use the colors that speak of cold: blue, light blue, and of course white. In the warm months, however, it was determined that you should only use yellow, orange and green: heat, sun, and summer meadows. Until, during the Christmas Eve, a child in front of the fireplace watched the flames and mandarins: they were decidedly orange, just like the summer sunsets!! We still remember years later the confusion that this discovery generated....
